Q: How to set a static photo for the app's home screen I am building an android app for Android devices, and I am interested in putting a static photo to the home screen of the users. I am thinking to use the following guide to do it: Because my application supports tablets, I would like to know if there is some way to find a static photo that will fit to all the resolutions? Or any other way to achieve this? Thanks

P.S.: Actually I am an iOS developer

A: The best way to get a background image is to simply have a drawable at your desired resolution, then declare that image as your background image in your styles.xml file (in the res/values directory). Then, if the device is larger than the screen size of your app, it will use the image provided. If it's smaller, it will use whatever you set as the background.

Q: CSS still shows up even when the class is not applied I don't know if this has been answered previously. I have been watching some youtube tutorials and the speaker recommended using !important in order to have a class override the standard tag styles. I know that this has been asked for a long time ago, so
